LASER FOCUS

For years dentists have been using lasers for a wide variety of dental procedures. A laser is an instrument that produces a very narrow, intense beam of light energy, which, in dentistry, can be used to remove or shape oral tissue, including gums, teeth and bone.

Dr. Dickerman has been using a laser in his practice since 1992 to reduce the discomfort caused by canker or cold sores, removing decay from a cavity and preparing the tooth for a new filling, exposing partially erupted wisdom teeth, managing gum tissue during impressions, performing biopsy procedures, removing inflamed gum tissue and aiding in the treatment of gum disease, removing or reshaping excess gum and bone tissue during crown-lengthening procedures, treating abscessed gums and root canal infections, activating whitening chemicals and speeding up bleaching procedures and even reducing tooth sensitivity.

The benefits of dental lasers:

- *reducing pain and allowing you to have a more relaxing experience
- *can be more precise than other methods of surgical treatment
- *control swelling and minimize bleeding-reducing postoperative discomfort and healing time.

Dental lasers are a safe and effective treatment option. Lasers are not appropriate for every dental procedure. Talk to your dentist to learn if laser treatment is right for you. If a patient can benefit from laser treatment be assured that Dr. Dickerman will discuss the Laser as a treatment option alternative.

Don't put off Important Dental care

We've all had moments where we put off something important. Maybe it was cleaning the house, or getting out to the grocery store, or getting your taxes in the mail. All kinds of things can get pushed aside and even forgotten. But when it comes to your oral health, procrastinating is the last thing you should do.

We understand that your time is precious, but so is your good health and wellbeing. Being proactive about important dental care will benefit your smile.

Some of the most common things that are put off are treatment for gum disease and cavities. But treatment for both is much easier and more cost effective when it happens early.

Don't put them off any longer!
